Everyone wants to make good decisions. Sometimes a person makes what seems like a good decision at a particular time, in a particular place in their life. A few years later, that decision may have long term effects that were never considered.

Leaving high school can be this type of decision. Just a couple of years later, the decision to drop out of high school has consequences that no one could have predicted, and the need for a high school diploma becomes important in order to move forward in life.

The Right to Succeed Program at Kish College can help by assisting young adults between the ages of 16 – 21 obtain a high school equivalency certificate and get their lives moving forward again. Instruction in math, science, social studies and language arts are all part of the class.

Get back on track . . . everyone has the Right to Succeed!
